
A value of 2.0 means the step took half as long as the naive kernel at the same particle count. The dashed line is the naive kernel itself. Bars combine the interquartile ranges of the two times.